Daniela Gabor

Professor of Economics and Macroeconomics, UWE Bristol Prof. Daniela Gabor's research develops three themes under the umbrella of critical macrofinance. First, she examines the macrofinancial implications of the structural shift to dollar-dominated market-based finance for monetary theory, central banking, sovereign bond markets and regulatory activity. Second, her research examines the new Wall Street Consensus paradigm for international development, and what the turn to private finance in international development means for countries in the Global South, particularly in relationship to low-carbon transitions. Third, her research contributes to ongoing debates on the regulation and management of capital flows to the Global South.
